THE GREAT STORM.

The Eastern Storm Raging with Increased Fury.

A Hurricane Blowing the Light Snow About.

Temperature as Low as Fifteen Below Reported.

Rail and Travel and Business Completely Blocked.

The Eastern Storm.

Boston Mass., January 27. The worst blockade since 1886 existed yesterday morning from Albany eastward, and no train passed through until late in the afternoon. At 9 last night seven passenger trains and one freight were blockaded in the vicinity of the city. On the Western road, where the snow is deepest, the drifts are in the roadway, and the snow plow that got through the worst of the Ostrand mud 9 o'clock Thursday night, seven hours behind time, was still working its way back to the city at 4 this morning. The Boston and Albany snow plow backed out the track. At midnight it was still snowing.

Providence Mass., January 27. Every train expected to reach the Boston and Albany road was snow bound here awaiting news of the opening of the road. Only one train got further than Attleboro, 20 miles south of this city, and that reached Providence at 9 o'clock last night. Two Old Colony and Newport trains got as far as Braintree, seven miles south of this city, and then backed up to the Union depot. A snow plow backed out from the city at midnight, but was stuck in the drifts. At midnight it was still snowing.

SUNDAY'S GAZETTE.

Sunday's Gazette will have the following special articles:

Edward A. Freeman will write on "Home Rule in Ireland," looking at the subject historically in connection with home rule agitation in other countries. No English writer can speak more authoritatively on this subject, not excepting Mr. Gladstone himself. This is the first of two letters which we shall publish on this subject.

The Honorable H. E. Bemer, member of the Norway legislature will write on "Republicanism in Norway."

An article on life at the Vatican will be found especially readable at this time because of important happenings there in connection with the pope's jubilee, which have attracted the attention of the civilized world. It includes an interesting personal sketch of Pope Leo XIII.

Julian Hawthorne writes an interesting letter on "Public Taste in Fiction." He has so often, in his writings, violated the good taste of his readers that he can probably write more interestingly on this subject than any other writer of action of equal prominence.

Gail Hamilton will continue her article on "Ghosts." The article will appear sensational to many people because Miss Hamilton views the subject the ghost in a different manner.

The sugar trust has dictated a sugar selling tariff to go out of power. This is supposed to be a free country, but a man cannot go into the sugar business now without the permission of this trust. It is rather a funny thing that they wish to sell their sugar, otherwise we should be obliged to get the permission of this trust to eat it.

The Grecian government has directed the minister of Greece to this country to urge the abolition of the duty on currants. This is one of the things that can be done without any injury to any industry. We are now receiving about fifteen millions as duty on fruits and nuts. This does not protect anything and ought, therefore, to be abolished.

We have received circulars stating that an international council of women will be held from March 25th to April 1st, in Washington. The meeting will begin with anniversary exercises of the fortieth year of the agitation of woman's suffrage. We trust that those who attend the meeting will have a pleasant time. This association seems to give a good deal of pleasant diversion to the ladies who are agitating the subject of women's suffrage. But there are so many ways in which the organized efforts of women may be beneficial to the morals and intelligence of the country that it seems a pity that they should flutter away so much time on fighting for principles they do not need, instead of exercising the rights they have.

We are glad to see that the house of representatives has at last waked up to the necessity of investigating the great trust monopolies. There is a special reason for taking up this subject at this time. Unquestionably the present tariff is a great aid to some of these monopolies. If there is to be a revision of the tariff, it is well that the people should have such changes as will destroy these monopolies without destroying the industries which they control. As we have said many of these monopolies exist because of the tariff, and in suppose determining what the tariff shall be it is the duty of congress to strike out these subsidies. Heretofore nearly all industries protected by this country have had competition between themselves to that fact that a higher tariff than was necessary was put on to which did not for this reason affect the price except in those cases which the demand was great for which the supply. For example in 1878 and 1879 there were several steel rail mills built in this country and the prices were forced by competition to less than the rate of duty, with the duty added. But in fact as the demand for steel rails was so much larger than the means of supplying them, they the price went up to the price of the English rails, with duty and freight added. This however was merely temporary. When the demand fell off competition between the steel rail manufactures reduced the price to a reasonable figure. The effect of the trust monopolies however is to destroy competition, so that the price is the highest at which the [illegible] can be sold. Therefore all [illegible] ought not to be protected by a duty which will enable them to get more than a reasonable profit on the cost. There was no need of the tariff on steel rails when the tariff was originally levied, respect on both the producer and the consumer, and the price was regulated solely by supply and demand. If the supply was small, the price was high. If there profits induced [illegible] in the industry, and the supply was increased, the price proportionately

Our advertisers crowd us so much this morning that we are compelled to condense our telegraph and editorial matter to make room for official correspondence. We shall issue an extra sheet next Sunday.

The Denver News feels that Cleveland has not more than an even show of carrying the delegates of New York state to the national democratic convention. We fear that the News founds its opinions too much on its sympathies. The News would like to see Hill nominated. It would be the best thing possible that could happen to the republican party. It would be impossible to nominate a candidate who could not beat Hill. The News is entirely right in its conclusion that the mugwumps would not support Hill, but this is the first year that we have heard it given as a reason for nominating a man that he would be sure not to draw votes outside of his own party.

The Hon. J. A. A. Bradford of Pueblo is said to be very ill. He is a typical Yankee. Born in Maine in 1815, he removed to Michigan in 1841, and kept in the vanguard of the pioneers until he settled in Pueblo in 1860. He began the practice of law in Michigan, and was clerk of the circuit of Arenac county from 1848 to 1850. He then removed to Iowa and was judge of the Sixth judicial district from 1852 to 1855. When the organization act in for Nebraska, he was one of the first to lead. He was a member of the territorial council in 1855, 1857 and 1858. In 1859 he removed to Colorado and was appointed by President Lincoln justice of the supreme court in 1861. He was a delegate to the constitutional convention of 1865-6, and from 1874 to 1876 and from 1881 to 1883. Of late years he has not been prominent, and in the rapid growth of Colorado, has rather been lost sight of. He was one of the most prominent of the pioneers connected with our history as a territory. Perhaps more stories are told of him, in connection with our early history, than of any other public man. One of the stories told which illustrates his wit is this. He once tried a case before a rather ignorant man who was justice of the peace in Lake County. On account of an unsound ruling of the judge he made some remarks which caused the judge to fine him five dollars for contempt of court. He passed the judge a ten dollar bill in payment of his fine saying: "Never mind the change; I will take it out in contempt."

REPUBLICANISM IN NORWAY.

A Letter from the Minister of the Storthing.

[Copyrighted, 1888, by the European Correspondence Co.]

Christiania, January 8, 1888.

"What is the present state of the republican movement in Norway?" comes the question to me from over the Atlantic. I will answer it as best I can.

The constitutional struggle in this country a few years ago proved that the final result of the contest would be the banishment from Norway of everything monarchical and the establishment of a republic. But, as will be remembered, a compromise was temporarily brought about by which Sverdrup, the leader of the people's party, became the king's prime minister. It was then very naturally supposed that a democratic era of government was to dawn upon the country.

Sverdrup himself had, at an earlier period, defined our constitution as an instrument which favored popular self government under the presidency of a king, an utterance which does not differ materially from Lincoln's definition of the American constitution. "A government of the people, for the people and by the people."

It cannot be said, however, that Sverdrup as minister has put in practice what he advocated as deputy. No. He stands charged with having deserted the popular cause, and this accusation is made not only by republicans but by moderate liberals, who had hoped that his advent to power would conciliate the differences that separated royalty and the people. To day, the liberal press upbraids Sverdrup as bitterly as it did a few years ago the "Royal lackey ministry," that supported the Swedish king in his attack on Norwegian liberties. Consequently a political storm is lowering on the horizon and the rumble of republican thunder is heard almost as distinctly to day as during the "veto fight" already referred to.

But these accusations against Mr. Sverdrup are far too exaggerated and unjust to be kept up for any length of time or to lead to any immediate or important result. Mr. Sverdrup cannot be held responsible for acts forced upon him by circumstances beyond his control. A minister under a monarchy—and it was the popular voice that made Sverdrup the king's lieutenant—has an arduous task at all times, and especially during the years immediately following a [illegible]. Even here in Norway we are now realizing the truth of Gambetta's remark during the third republic in France: "In time of peace it is possible, with [illegible] difficulties, but in time of war it is impossible."

But, at the same time, it cannot be denied that many things that Sverdrup has done may be charged to the cause of just complaint. He has given offence in instances where he ought to and might have avoided it. For example, he has not paid due respect to our democratic ways, for it should be remembered that Norway has no nobility nor even an aristocracy of wealth. When, a few days after their appointment to the ministry, Mr. Sverdrup and his colleagues appeared at the royal capitol attired in the simple dress of plain citizens, without decorations or orders of any kind, we Norwegians were proud of our representatives.

Unfortunately, however, this sensible custom was not followed for a long time. He soon received from the king's hands decorations "for services rendered to the country," similar to those that had been bestowed, and for the [illegible], on the ministerial bench our supreme court had pursued a few years before for having supported the king in actions "that were opposed to the best interests of the kingdom." But it is not Mr. Sverdrup alone who has been knighted. The president of the storthing and several of its members were also honored in a similar way.

The Norwegian court party—for, I am sorry to say, a court party exists—laughs in its sleeve when it sees how royal show and decorations are again in the ascendency. More simpleness and republican virtue was to have been expected from these men whom we had trusted. Their weakness has quickened into life slumbering republican sentiment which rises to protest against such demoralization. Under a republican form of government so many good men would never have fallen.

Let us now turn for a moment from the humor of the moment, from the struggle for personal honors and from the faults of rulers, and look at another phase of the subject.

It is now a recognized fact that parliamentarism, which has prevented monarchy in Norway and will preserve it for many years to come in other European states, brings a people nearer and nearer to that final evolution, self government under a republic. Parliamentarism, if rightly understood and practiced, will prove to be a blessing of this land to Norway. The growth may be rather slow in this country, slower than in many other lands perhaps, for our peasantry, who are the most powerful element in our political life, are inclined towards conservatism. But for this very reason, a step in advance is a sure one. These Norwegian farmers never go back wards.

I may say, then, that precisely there is at present nothing in Norway that can be excited a strong republican current, nor any movement that promises as its aim the establishment of the republic. If the republic is to come as quickly as better by zeal, as Bjornstjerne Bjornson has hopefully expressed it, it cannot be blamed for saying that our postal department is very slow. In any case, it is useless for us to run to the postoffice to inquire if the letter has come. No. The people's party has enough to do at present to establish in our midst a solid and thorough parliamentary system. The rest will come naturally and in due season.

There is an element in our politics to day that is more threatening than the republican agitation, to the existence of monarchy in Norway. I refer to the demand of Norway for equal rights with Sweden in the management of our diplomatic affairs. Whether Norway and the north throw over monarchy depends in no small measure on this question of our joint relations in foreign affairs.

If Norway's rights in this important matter be denied, then the question of disunion would immediately become a living issue, and once raised, King Oscar will have b[illegible] to [illegible]. If the next subject taken up by Norway would be the establishment of a republic. However that may be, at present and under ordinary circumstances, every good Norwegian should say of the Scandinavian union what Thiers said of the republic in France: "It is the form of government that divides us the least."

H. E. BERGH, Deputy.

Almost Declared in a Trance.

Rome, January 28.—The pope to day received 300 American pilgrims, among whom were the archbishop of Philadelphia, the bishop of Buffalo, the vicar general of Charleston and the rector of the American college at Rome. Colorado Springs has now one of the most likely appointed restaurants in the state, the Delmonico. During the past few days the interior of this well known establishment has undergone a thorough change. The walls and ceiling have been repapered with a fine quality of wall paper, the work being admirably executed by the firm of George Cox & Co. The floor has been laid with hardwood and the western end of the dining room is ornamented with one of the handsomest black walnut buffets in the state. This was ordered by Mr. Reed particularly for his own use. The table of the Delmonico is surpassed by that of no similar establishment in the city. It is supplied with the best the market affords and the guests are treated with the utmost courtesy and attention. Mr. [illegible] is now prepared to rent furnished rooms in connection with the restaurant and gives special rates to transients. $1 per [illegible]. A full description of this popular restaurant is found in another column this morning.
